College in Jail
How to Build a Successful Partnership Between a Sheriff’s Department and a Community College

This toolkit assists California community colleges and Sheriff’s Departments as they build partnerships to provide face-to-face college education inside county jails.

These partnerships make sense: higher education reduces recidivism, changes lives, and builds stronger communities. Read the full toolkit on our website for tips on how community colleges and Sheriff’s Departments can work together to offer high-quality college education inside county jails.

On Campus
Fostering Success for Formerly Incarcerated Students on Campus

This toolkit assists colleges in developing and strengthening on-campus programs or student groups supporting formerly incarcerated students.

Programs supporting formerly incarcerated students vary in structure, funding streams, and staffing, but they share a commitment to addressing students’ academic and non-academic needs. This toolkit features tips for funded and unfunded on-campus programs and student groups and offers advice from formerly incarcerated students about what supports actually build success.
